Quick Start

What is Racket Sports Parent?

Racket Sports Parent gives parents a better way to support their player's development while respecting the coach-player relationship. Use the app to organize tournaments, capture meaningful match performance, track ratings and trends, compare tournament results, and turn what happens in competition into useful information that can be shared with the coach.

Parent observes. App organizes. Coach interprets. Player develops.

The basic workflow

Add Your Player(s) -> Add a Tournament -> Record a Match -> Review the Results -> Share With the Coach

Start simple

You do not need to use every feature on your first day. Start with your player profile(s), an upcoming tournament, and one Match Analysis. As you become comfortable, you can use Performance Trends, Tournament Comparison, Rating History, Competitive Behavior, reminders, and other tools when they are useful.

The goal is not for the parent to diagnose the problem. Your input helps organize patterns and gives the coach useful information to evaluate.

Your First Five Steps

1

Complete Your Account

Review your account information and make sure your contact details are current.

2

Add Your Player(s)

Create a profile for each player you want to track. Add current rating information such as USTA, UTR, or WTN when available. Ratings can be updated over time without losing the history.

3

Add an Upcoming Tournament

Use Tournament Planner to add an upcoming event. Record the event details that matter to you and use the planner to keep preparation tasks, reminders, registration information, and tournament status organized.

4

Try Match Analysis

When your player competes, start Match Analysis and record what you can accurately observe. You do not have to record every point. If you miss one or more points, select Pause Recording. Once you know the actual score on the court, select Resume / Sync Current Score, enter the current score and server, and continue. Missed points are not included in Match Analysis statistics.

5

Review and Share

After the match, review the Match Report. Add Match Observations, Match Takeaways, and optional Competitive Behavior observations when useful. Then use Send to Coach / Print / Export to share meaningful information with the coach.

Missed a point? Don't guess or try to recreate it. Pause, sync to the actual court score, and continue from there.

Observe. Record. Review. Share. Let the coach interpret what the information means for development.

A Few Things to Remember

You don't have to record every point.

Match Analysis is designed to identify useful performance patterns - not require perfect match charting. Even a partial analysis can provide valuable information. Use the About Match Analysis information in the app whenever you need a reminder about the courtside workflow.

If you miss points, sync - don't guess.

Select Pause Recording. When you know the actual score on the court, select Resume / Sync Current Score, enter the current score and server, and continue recording. Points missed during the pause are not included in Match Analysis statistics.

Observe - don't diagnose.

Record what you actually see during competition. The app helps organize the information; the coach determines what it means for development.

Competitive Behavior is optional and post-match.

After a match, you can record observable patterns involving the player's between-point routine, changeover routine, response to mistakes or adversity, and body language/composure. Competitive Behavior is not a mental-toughness score and does not change match statistics.

Use voice-to-text.

For text fields, use your device keyboard's built-in microphone when available to speak notes and observations instead of typing them.

Share useful information - not instructions.

Match reports can help a coach see information from competition they may not have attended. The purpose is to strengthen communication and the player-parent-coach partnership, not to replace the coach's judgment.

Support the Journey. Without Becoming the Coach.
